TRADERS' GLOSSARY

Actuals — Refers to actual, physical commodities, distinguished from futures.
Basis — The difference between spot (cash) prices and the futures contract price.
Channel — In charting, a price channel contains prices throughout a trend. There are three basic ways to draw channels: parallel, rounded, and channels that connect lows (bear trend) or highs (bull trend).
Commodity Futures Trading Commission (CFTC) — A commission that oversees the commodity exchanges in the US.
Convergence — When futures prices and spot prices come together at the futures expiration.
Delta Position — Measure of option price vs. underlying futures contract or stock price.
Fast Market — A declaration that market conditions in the futures pit are so disorderly temporarily that floor brokers are not held responsible for the execution of orders.

Futures — Commodities contracts to be delivered at a later time.
Leg Out — In rolling forward in futures, a method that would result in liquidating a position.
Managed Futures — A fund that uses the futures market as its primary asset.
Margin — In futures trading, the deposit placed with the clearinghouse to assure fulfillment of the contract. This amount varies daily and is settled in cash.
Marked to Market — At the end of each business day the open positions carried in an account held at a brokerage firm are credited or debited funds based on the settlement price of the open positions that day.

Spinx — The difference between the S&P 500 futures price and the S&P 500 spot (or cash) price.
Stock Index Futures — A futures contract that uses a market index as the underlying instrument. Typically, the value of the contract is $500 times the underlying index. The delivery mechanism is usually cash settlement.
Trailing Stop — A stop-loss order that follows the prevailing price trend.
Uncovered Option — The buy or sale of an option without a position in the underlying futures contract; also known as a naked option.
